

Alasdair Fraser's

SIERRA FIDDLE CAMP

Sierra Village Fund

During one week at Alasdair Fraser's Sierra Fiddle Camp you'll see and hear teenagers, elders and youngsters jamming, guitarists playing intently in the brick dome, joy on the face of the cellist who just "got it", the wild abandon of everyone on the dance floor, philosophical musings on the physics of music, the resonance of the full camp playing together, and the private moments of instrument and musician finding the groove. With an outstanding local, national and international faculty and a village of eager players, Sierra Fiddle Camp is an experience not to be missed.

Many would thrive by having the opportunity to spend a week at camp – someone picking up a fiddle for the first time, others who are sharpening already keen skills, or a person of any age discovering the joys of expressing themselves on one of the many instruments and musical styles taught at camp.

Sierra Village Fund is the resource we use to defray the cost of camp for promising and deserving musicians, as well as for music teachers who carry the spirit of the village back to their students. Additionally, money from the fund is used to help develop and broaden the vision of camp.

With help from funds collected last year,
40 musicians are attending this year's camp.
